Registration of foreign companies: briefly about the main thing

Organizations located outside the United States must be registered in a special Dun&Bradstreet database. If you plan to cooperate with the American federal government and ensure tax reporting compliance, it is worth taking care of obtaining a TIN identification number. This is a kind of employer EIN number.

What does a unique identifier provide?

Obtaining a special DUNS number provides the company owner with a number of advantages. If you receive it, then perhaps:

1. Filling out an application for government contracts. The federal government requires that all contractors and government grant applicants have a DUNS number.
2. Contact potential partners. This means that a company representative can view the company's rating using the DUNS number. Most organizations consider this an excellent opportunity to check the financial stability of the institution.

3. Develop applications. Apple requires iOS developers to use a unique ID when creating an Apple Store account. Typically, this is necessary in order to standardize the process and submit the application.
4. Register a supplier. A huge part of companies that sell goods at retail require a special DUNS number from the supplier. After all, this will simplify the process of finding information about a partner.
5. Apply for an SSL type certificate. And although having a number is not considered mandatory, it is worth having. After all, this way you can speed up the procedure, obtain reliable information, and improve the level of site security.
6. Get a business loan. With the number you can create your credit history and strengthen confidence in your business.
7. Credit reporting tracking. Having the code, you will be able to access updated information about your company, which is in the database, and correct errors in reports.
8. Get financing. Assuming your company has a good credit rating, you can apply for a loan, credit, or other type of financing.
